

Influence Indicators

The influence indicators endeavour to connect the work that goes into rights protection, advocacy and influence to tangible benefits for whānau, hapū and iwi. The indicators are based on the following assumptions:

- That influencing the national and local policies and politics is an important part of rights protection; and
- That rights protection is driven by the ultimate objective of being able to express and perpetuate identity and ways of living.

These indicators are also complemented by the whānau and hapū impact indicators in all the other categories.

The tiers of indicators therefore endeavour to reflect:

scale	efficiency	enabling impact	hapū/whānau impact	tribal impact
Number of policy issues identified as of concern to tribal interest	Input cost per analysis	$ value of funding or other benefit obtained from the government (or other source) Number of government policies identified as of concern that concluded in a way that respects inherent rights Number of media items that fairly portray advocacy issues Percentage of non-tribal members that understand tribal position	Number of government policies that allow for/affirm the application of tikanga/ matauranga Number of whānau/ hapū development opportunities created by assertion of inherent rights/ responsibilities Number of whānau/ hapū service delivery/ partnership arrangements	Percentage of members who have confidence in the Iwi organisation upholding their rights Percentage of membership satisfied that Iwi advocacy efforts are consistent with tribal history and values
